Frederike van Uildriks (1854-1919). New Woman, Universal Savant and Popular Scientist in the Netherlands

DEPARTMENT II
GENDER STUDIES OF SCIENCE
BEYOND THE ACADEMY. HISTORIES OF GENDER ...

MINEKE BOSCH

In this contribution the focus is on Frederike van Uildriks as the author of an enormous and varied output of books and articles, literary reviews, comments and fictional stories, many but by large not all of these on subjects relating to 'nature', in more than forty papers and periodicals ranging from general cultural journals, family weeklies, popular science publications to critical political journals. An analysis of her life and work that until recently remained largely unknown reveals that an important aspect of her formative career as a secondary-school teacher and publicist was in her self-education and her taking up seriously the old art of common-placing. From publishing nice citations in a paper she developed into a part time publicist on a wide range of subjects. This changed when in 1891 she entered a common-law marriage.
