

WHAT (GOOD) IS HISTORICAL EPISTEMOLOGY?

Guest Editors: Thomas Sturm and Uljana FeestOriginal Articles

| | |
|---|---------|
| ULJANA FEEST and THOMAS STURM / What (Good) is Historical Epistemology? Editors' Introduction | 285–302 |
| THOMAS STURM / Historical Epistemology or History of Epistemology? The Case of the Relation Between Perception and Judgment | 303–324 |
| JUTTA SCHICKORE / The Significance of Re-Doing Experiments: A Contribution to Historically Informed Methodology | 325–347 |
| M. NORTON WISE / Science as (Historical) Narrative | 349–376 |
| THEODORE ARABATZIS / On the Historicity of Scientific Objects | 377–390 |
| ULJANA FEEST / Remembering (Short-Term) Memory: Oscillations of an Epistemic Thing | 391–411 |
| HASOK CHANG / The Persistence of Epistemic Objects Through Scientific Change | 413–429 |
| MICHAEL FRIEDMAN / Extending the Dynamics of Reason | 431–444 |
| PETER BARKER / The Cognitive Structure of Scientific Revolutions | 445–465 |
| MICHAEL HEIDELBERGER / Causal and Symbolic Understanding in Historical Epistemology | 467–482 |
| MARTIN KUSCH / Reflexivity, Relativism, Microhistory: Three Desiderata for Historical Epistemologies | 483–494 |
| BARRY STROUD / Epistemology, the History of Epistemology, Historical Epistemology | 495–503 |
| PHILIP KITCHER / Epistemology Without History is Blind | 505–524 |
| MARY TILES / Is Historical Epistemology Part of the 'Modernist Settlement'? | 525–543 |